

COMPLETE GUIDE TO THE ISLANDS

SOUTH PACIFIC

FROM EXTREME LUXURY TO UNDER £250 A NIGHT

WEEKEND FIXES BERLIN MUMBAI VIENNA GLASGOW

NEW YORK'S HIPPEST FOODIE SECRET

BUMPER HOTEL ISSUE

OVER 50 REVIEWS + APARTMENTS + SKI CHALETS

This former bakery at the foot of the Kampenwand Mountain used to supply bread to the nearby castle before it was turned into 16 apartments by owner and designer Nils Holger Moormann. In his furniture, form follows function, and he often collaborates with fellow German designers who share his streamlined vision. Here, black plywood beds fit together like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle, magnetic shelves are moveable and white storage cupboards can be rolled about on castors. It's out-of-the-box thinking packaged up to look effortlessly simple. Each space is laid out differently (in Nordwand, you sleep in the eaves, while studio K3 has a fold-away bed) but whichever you plump for, there is no TV or Wi-Fi. Instead, you'll find well-thumbed novels and knitting kits with the first few rows already started. If you fancy taking one home you can buy them in the shop, along with the beech chopping boards, salt pots and Bavarian beer glasses found in the kitchen. www.moormann-berge.de. From £312 per person for a four-night stay. Apartments sleep up to six

BAITA 1697

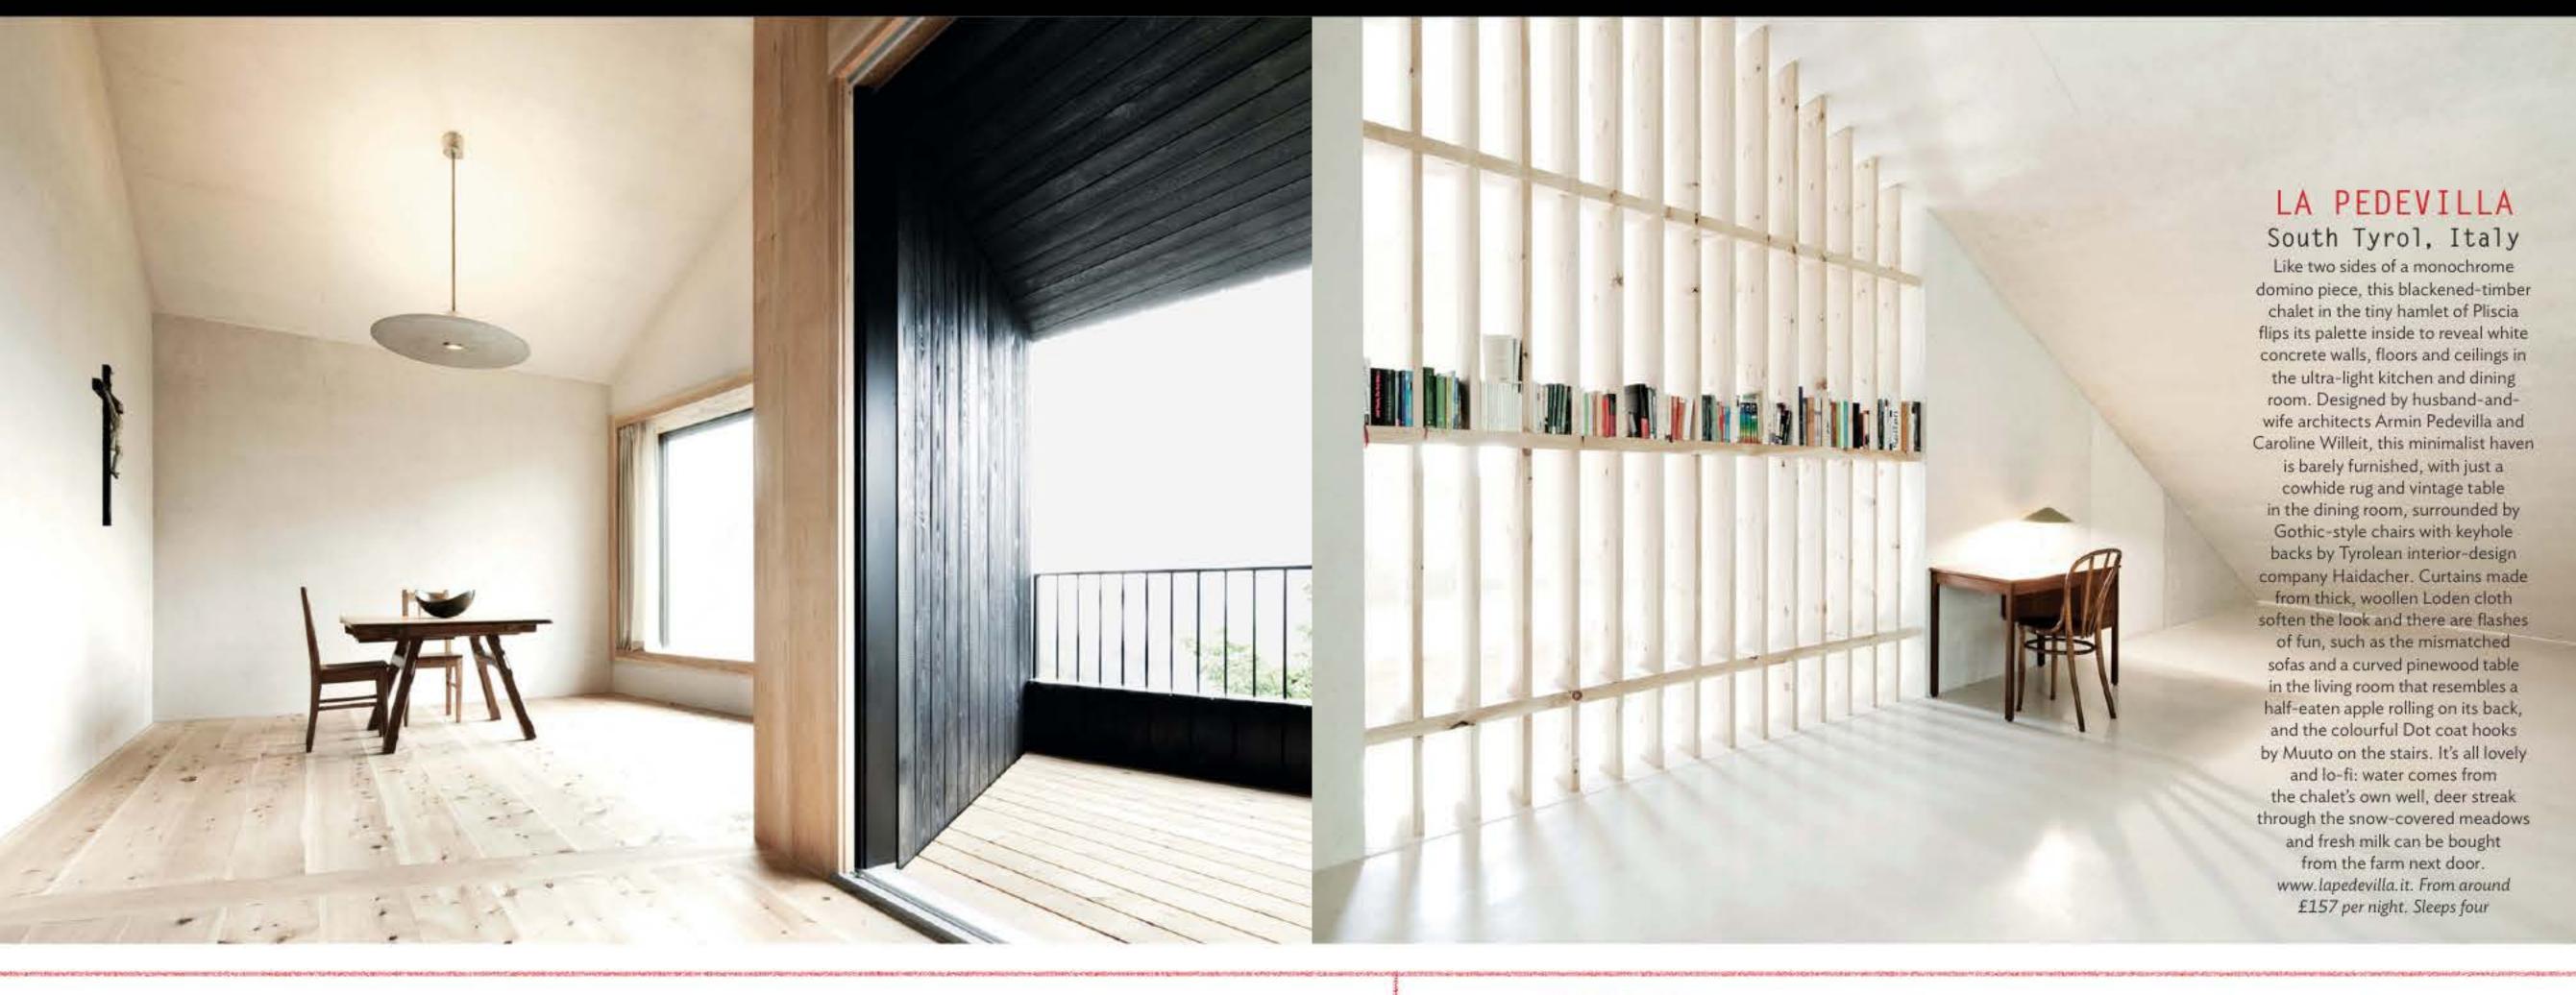

Sestriere, Italy

Gloriously grown-up, this renovated 17th-century Piedmontese farmhouse is in equal parts snug and sleek. In the open-plan living/dining room, interior-designer owner Lucy McCullough has taken her cues from the vaulted stone ceiling and fireplace, cleverly colour-matching sofas, cushions and triangular-scooped felt chairs by Belgian design duo Fox & Freeze to the cavelike space. At one end, a larch table by local sculptor Guido Ronchail unfolds like an envelope to seat 12 on Perspex chairs draped in fluffy sheepskins. Upstairs are five bedrooms (plus a dorm for the kids): one, in the eaves, has a reclaimed copper bathtub; another a lustrous silver-leaf sleigh bed and, in the en-suite, painted rich teal, a fantastically intricate Chinese latticework screen divides the space. The best spot, though, is the top-floor living room. Here a pair of leather club chairs rootled out from the Braderie de Lille antiques market sit next to the woodburner on a patchwork Mongolian felt rug. And beyond the sliding door, a hot tub and firepit face out to the Milky Way's highest mountain, Banchetta. www.alpineguru.com. From £12,654 a week, catered. Sleeps 18

RENTING A SKI CRASHPAD USED TO MEAN A WEEK OF ALPINE TWEENESS, BUT NOW A NEW BREED HAS HIT THE SLOPES, FUSING HIGH-CONCEPT ARCHITECTURE WITH COVETABLE INTERIOR DESIGN. HERE'S OUR PICK OF THE EUROPEAN CHALETS THAT REALLY TAKE IT TO THE EDGE. BY EMMA LOVE

FRESTYLING

AUFBERG 1113 Piesendorf, near Zell Am Zee, Austria

What a spectacular modern structure.

Made from glass and black-painted larch, this raised rectangular box has a balcony that catches the sun throughout the day. Designed by architect Andreas Meck, the house is split into two apartments -Sparrow's Nest and Swallow's Nest that can be rented separately or together. Both have a stylish, uniform look: flagstone or wood floors, felt-covered sofas, open fires and quirky chill-out nooks cut out of the wall. Much of the furniture has been built by the architect, including a dining room table that's made from an old wooden door, but there are also Hans Wegner chairs and a matching Bestlite light hanging from the ceiling, a bathtub by Philippe Starck and a coat stand made from sticks by designer Michael Schwebius that looks more like a piece of art. www.aufberg.at. From £149 per night individually; £354 per night for the whole house (sleeps seven)

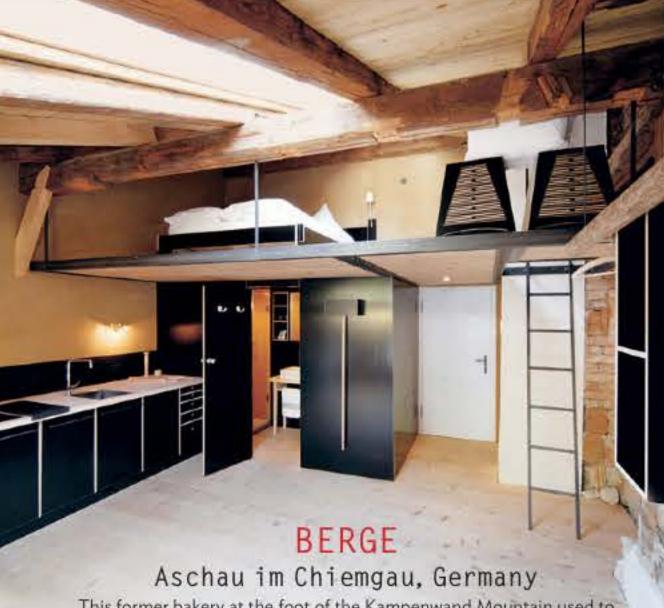

MONTAGNE ALTERNATIVE

Orsiéres, Switzerland

In the once-forgotten medieval hamlet of Commiere, a handful of houses and barns have been revamped by Swiss architect Patrick Devanthéry, whose work includes the Lausanne opera house. Crooked walls have been straightened and strengthened, roofs rebuilt and floors polished. The result is a sensitive yet still rustic transformation - each of the four chalets retains traces of its former life, whether in the larch that has been re-used on the stairs or the window slats inspired by the spaces between barn beams once used to dry hay. The biggest and most contemporary is Barbey, which sleeps 10. But all have been brought bang up to date with leather sofas beside glassfronted fireplaces, plus there's a yoga and spa treatment room in one of the buildings. Much of the furniture, such as the 1950s school chairs, was bought at antique markets in Brussels, and combined with Indian throws and swirly-patterned rugs, a three-legged Tom Dixon stool in one corner, a big Moroccan cushion in another. It's an eclectic and unexpected mix that really works. www.montagne-alternative.com. From about £260 per night for Maison Berard (sleeps four)

This former bakery at the foot of the Kampenwand Mountain used to supply bread to the nearby castle before it was turned into 16 apartments by owner and designer Nils Holger Moormann. In his furniture, form follows function, and he often collaborates with fellow German designers who share his streamlined vision. Here, black plywood beds fit together like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle, magnetic shelves are moveable and white storage cupboards can be rolled about on castors. It's out-of-the-box thinking packaged up to look effortlessly simple. Each space is laid out differently (in Nordwand, you sleep in the eaves, while studio K3 has a fold-away bed) but whichever you plump for, there is no TV or Wi-Fi. Instead, you'll find well-thumbed novels and knitting kits with the first few rows already started. If you fancy taking one home you can buy them in the shop, along with the beech chopping boards, salt pots and Bavarian beer glasses found in the kitchen. www.moormann-berge.de. From £312 per person for a four-night stay. Apartments sleep up to six

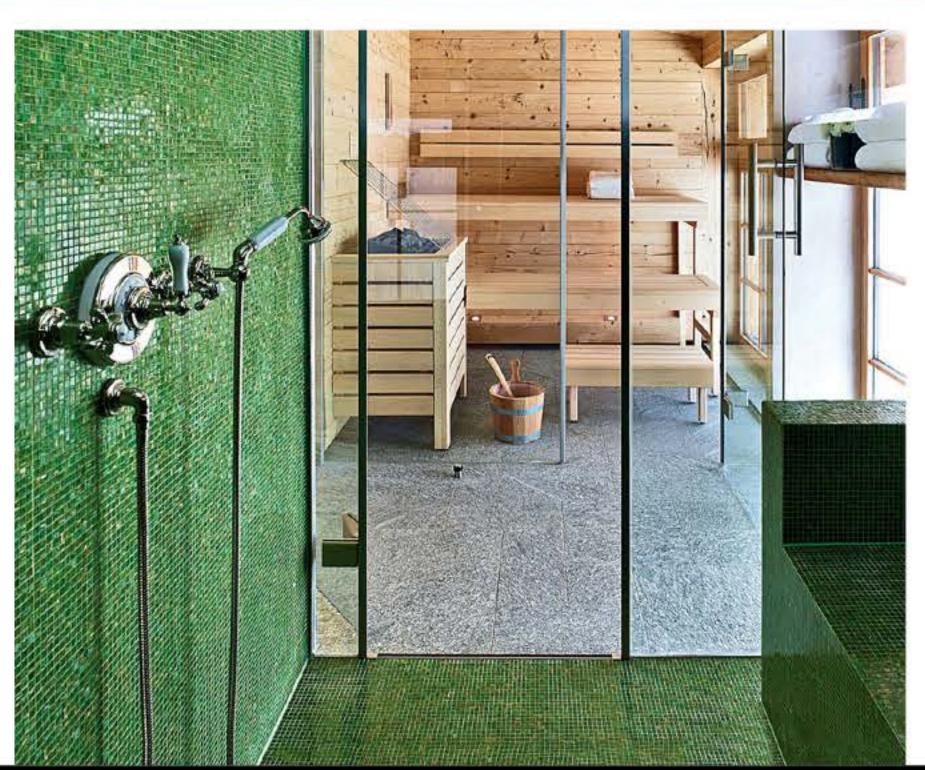

BAITA 1697 Sestriere, Italy

Gloriously grown-up, this renovated 17th-century Piedmontese farmhouse is in equal parts snug and sleek. In the open-plan living/dining room, interior-designer owner Lucy McCullough has taken her cues from the vaulted stone ceiling and fireplace, cleverly colour-matching sofas, cushions and triangular-scooped felt chairs by Belgian design duo Fox & Freeze to the cavelike space. At one end, a larch table by local sculptor Guido Ronchail unfolds like an envelope to seat 12 on Perspex chairs draped in fluffy sheepskins. Upstairs are five bedrooms (plus a dorm for the kids): one, in the eaves, has a reclaimed copper bathtub; another a lustrous silver-leaf sleigh bed and, in the en-suite, painted rich teal, a fantastically intricate Chinese latticework screen divides the space. The best spot, though, is the top-floor living room. Here a pair of leather club chairs rootled out from the Braderie de Lille antiques market sit next to the woodburner on a patchwork Mongolian felt rug. And beyond the sliding door, a hot tub and firepit face out to the Milky Way's highest mountain, Banchetta. www.alpineguru.com. From £12,654 a week, catered. Sleeps 18

SKYFALL

St Christoph, Austria

Despite the Bond-ish name and numbering of the four apartments (001 to 004), the vibe here is homely, somewhere to hunker down. Named by the owners' children for the breathtaking views of the Valluga peak, Skyfall is the first private chalet to be built in the village for 50 years, and possibly the last, due to super-strict planning restrictions. The pick here is penthouse apartment 004, set on the top two floors with five bedrooms and bathrooms and a smart, David Linleydesigned kitchen. In the dining room, glass-disc chandeliers by Italian lighting company Viabizzuno twinkle above an antique refectory table. Original blackand-white mountaineering photographs from the Royal Geographical Society and vintage ski posters are framed on the walls. Everything is cleverly considered, right down to little touches such as bone handles on the doors, tree motifs carved on the bunk beds and a pair of binoculars atop a tripod for spotting skiers as they swoosh down the slopes. www.arlbergskyfall.com. 004 from £14,220 a week. Sleeps 11

